REPLY T O Sir William Howe s Observations, >ct WHEN a man, conscious of his own misconduct, or at least lying under the charge bf having betrayed a public trust, a trust of as great importance as was ever committed to any subject, finds himself under the necessity of misrepresenting notorious facts, and even of descending to personal detraction, for his own vindication, he is truly to be pitied. This appears to be the case of the late Commander in Chief of his Majesty s Forces in America. If the Author of the Letters to a Nobleman has contributed to the distress of the General, he has done it with reluctance, from a regard to truth and justice, and a sense of duty to B the the public, and not from any impulse of private resentment; for he frankly declares, he never had any cause of personal enmity to Sir William Howe, who neither had personally injured nor osfended him; and therefore, that the motives which led him to publish his strictures on the conduct of the American war, could not arise from such a principle. He considered him only in his public capacity, and, imagining that he could throw new light on a subject which appeared to many to be dark and problematical, and in which the public welfare was intimately concerned, he proceeded to animadvert upon his conduct as Commander in Chief. Nor was the examination of the management of the...
