A Short time after the Rebellion in Ireland, in the year 1798, I happened to be in the county of Wexford; and, one evening, walking in the country with a friend, we were accosted by a young woman, who, with wild look and manner, stopped to speak to us. Don t be frightened, said my friend, seeing me look alarmed; it is poor Mary, --mad Mary: she never does harm. Poor thing! she has suffered grievously by this cruel rebellion. In one night, her husband, her house, and child were burned; and poor Mary, the pride and beauty, I am told, of the village, lost her senses. She now rambles about, supported by the peasantry,...
