Charles Sumner at the Annual Convention of the Republican Party of Massachusetts, Held at Worcester, September 22, 1869 These they would hand over to oblivion, hoping on some local appeal to disorganize our forces, or, perhaps, obtain power to be wielded against the national cause. Massachusetts cannot afford to occupy an uncertain position. Therefore, I begin by asking you to think of our country, our whole country, - in other words, of National Affairs at home and abroad. Security for the Future It is now four years since I had the honor of presiding at our annual Convention, and I do not forget how at that time I endeavored to remind you of this same national cause then in fearful peril. The war of armies was ended; no longer was fellow-citizen arrayed against fellow-citizen; on each side the trumpet was hushed, the banner furled. But the defection of Andrew Johnson had then begun, and out of that defection the Rebellion assumed new life, with new purposes and new hopes. If it did not spring forth once more fully armed, it did spring forth filled with hate and diabolism towards all who loved the Union, whether white or black. There were exceptions, I know; but they were not enough to change the rule. And straightway the new apparition, acting in conjunction with the northern Democracy, aboriginal allies of the Rebellion, planned the capture of the National Government. Its representatives came up to Washington. Then was the time for a few decisive words - in the name of the Republic on which for four years they waged bloody...
