Excerpt: .that they might have been called a Life. I fear I have displeased him; if I have, I desire I may know so much, that I may ask his pardon. As for the Diary of Archbishop Matthew, upon my second reading of it, I find it may be contracted into a very few useful and exemplary observations, which will be as a mirror to show the man, and with the addition of what is said by Wood, Fuller, c. may increase our Biography; and therefore beg of you that it may lie by me a little, and so I shall send back your book safely, with those additions of respect and honour to his memory which I am able to collect and make. His, and his wife's epitaphs, are the epitomes of the whole. As for your papers, I am not able to censure that of antiquities, in which sort of learning I am nobody. For the Life of your father, it is a most exemplary and curious thing; it may be, there are some things of economical concernment, which the world will not care for. A thing that often comes into my mind in reading and writing Lives, and particularly in that of Mr. Rayner's; how are men concerned, thought I, to know, in so large a narrative, how much Norwich and Lincoln strove for him? with many other things of the like importance. I must also plainly and friendly tell...
