Not illustrated. 1882 Excerpt: .long before Daniel O Connell made the name famous over all the world and through all coming time. If we had not limited our proofs to unpublished documents, we might have gone back to the days of the Nuncio Rinuccini; the first bishop he met in Ireland was Rickard O Connell, Bishop of Ardfert and Kerry. But we ought at least to have given in this context the following letter from the Knight of Kerry, who was then a member of the Irish government: the answer sent by O Connell s uncle was printed in our last Number: -- Dear Sir, I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind intentions, and for the pains you took for me. I have now, thank Qod, weathered the storm; and, unless I meet some unforeseen misfortune, I never shall encounter such distress again. I have no doubt you will exert yourself, and prevail on your friends to do so, in favour of the plan for removing the abominable grievance at Drungbill. I suppose Jermyn has before now made a good progress in tracing the proper line and forming an estimate. I think the work should be done in a style of solidity and duration, well guarded by arches, and a stout lintern, from the mountain waters, and so executed us to make it an everlasting work for the purpose. We must not hesitate at some A graphic account of their interview in Macroom Castle, will be found at..
